Loyd Wright called me this morning from Köln where he is attending the International Bar Association meeting. We had a long talk about the Cooper family [redacted] then he launched forth in criticism of the American exhibition at the Brussels Fair. Although a Los Angeles lawyer and representing many motion picture interests, he said he violently objected to the juxtaposition of photographs of Lana Turner and Kim Novak with that of Thomas Jefferson. All in all, he thought our showing was lousy, whereas Mr. Hamilton had thought the whole thing wonderful.

I went to see Kit Steel this afternoon. His interview with von Brentano yesterday [redacted] passed off satisfactorily, [redacted] the latter felt the German Government had now come out fully in support of the U. S. and British landings. However, Steel said Blankenhorn [redacted] again proved unsatisfactory in speaking on the subject in a NAC meeting yesterday. Frank Roberts is to talk to Blankenhorn about this today.

It looks as if a Summit Conference will be held at the UN. The British and Americans have accepted. Khrushchev has said he wants Nehru and representatives of the Arab States to be present when matters affecting them are under consideration. De Gaulle's position still remains ambiguous.

The Chancellor sent for me to come and see him at 4:30 this afternoon. He told me about his conversation with Spaak today [redacted]
